

Dear Community Member

eCommunity is partnering with the banking and financial services industry as well as a variety of finance counseling agencies to help low-income households have direct access to online banking and financial resources.

One of the biggest challenges of living in poverty is the amount of money spent trying to stay afloat. When cash flows are tight, the first thing to go is paying for Internet. Without Internet, access, you can't effectively track your accounts. The next to go are bank accounts. As a result, reliance on cash checking services, pay-day loans and other cut-rate options do nothing but erode already low resources.

To help overcome financial decay, we are partnering with organizations focused on leveraging eCommunity to link qualified customers directly to banking websites and resources, all without using the Internet. By combining no-cost access to accounts, with financial literacy tutorials and videos, and the ability to engage financial support services, all without paying for internet access, will hopefully help lift some households out of the cycle of poverty.

Below are a list of partner organizations and agencies that are ready to help:

Alabama – Macon, Lee, Tallapoosa Counties

Not available - Check back soon.

Georgia – SW Atlanta, Homerville, Warner Robins

Not available - Check back soon.

If you don't see an agency focused on your community, please check back periodically as we continue to expand our network and add more partners.

Sincerely,

eCommunity Community Awareness Team
